Wasatch High Graduate Receives Exxon Award

Wave 2-28-85

Emory O. Sonderegger, a 1948 graduate of Wasatch High School and an associate professor of accounting at Brigham Young University for 25 years, was one of two faculty members to receive Exxon Teaching Excellence Awards Thursday.

The awards were presented at a faculty dinner by Dr. Paul Thompson, dean of the School of Management. J. Bonner Ritchie, a professor of organizational behavior, received the other Exxon Award.

A native of Midway, Sonderegger is the son of the late Ernest E. and Grace W. Sonderegger, long-time residents of Midway.

He joined the BYU faculty in 1960 and is a certified public accountant. He has done consulting work for many organizations, including Exxon Company, for which he helped develop a program of continuing education for the accounting staff, and Marriott Corp., for which he evaluated internal control for hotels, flight kitchens, rest-husband passed away and cared for them until she came home. Now, indeed, it was difficult for her to make a living. She gleaned wheat whenever she could find anyone who would allow her to do so. Many times she walked to Charleston, seven miles distant, to Nymphus Murdock's farm and bound wheat. There was very few men who could keep up with her binding. She also picked hops and sold them to help support her family.

In 1888 she again joined her life to Jonathan Clegg, this time celestially, and lived happily with him in plural marriage for 25 years. She became so aged she was not able to do for him, and her son-in-law, John Clyde, came and with much persuasion she went to live with them at Midway, Wasatch County. They did everything to make her declining years happy and comfortable. She lived and seemed to enjoy it. On May 4, 1900, she died of old age at her daughter's home and was buried in Heber City Cemetery. She lived a faithful Latter-day Saint life and never once regretted leaving all that was near and dear to her to come to Zion. Many times she was heard to say she would not give up her testimony and knowledge of the gospel to be a queen on her throne.

Her eldest son, William Farr, went away sity of Cincinnati in 1930, and has done post-graduate work at Columbia University.

On August 30, 1923, he married Grace Dorius, and they have two sons, Don and Carl.
